As an early childhood professional, you know how comprehensive developmental screening can improve lives and outcomes for children and families. But to parents, screening can sometimes be a source of fear and anxiety—especially if they’re not sure their child is reaching key milestones.

How can you help?

Arm parents with the knowledge they need: about their child’s development and the critical importance of periodic developmental screening.

This toolkit makes it easy, with links to fact sheets, checklists, posters, and charts that educate families about key milestones and get them on board with developmental screening. You’ll also find resources geared toward professionals, to help you improve your screening program and work effectively with families. Share these free resources today—and help ensure that more children are screened early for delays and connected with services that make all the difference.

6 things every parent should know about developmental screening

- It identifies delays early, when interventions can help the most.
- It helps ensure better futures. Studies show* that children who receive early treatment for developmental delays are more likely to graduate from high school, hold jobs, and live independently.
- It’s recommended by the AAP. The American Academy of Pediatrics recommends that all infants and young children be screened for delays as a regular part of their ongoing health care.
- It helps parents take an active role in guiding child development. Using a parent-completed screener like ASQ gives parents a chance to share their unique insights about their child and learn more about key developmental milestones.
- It boosts parent-child bonding. Parent-completed screenings are a great bonding experience for parents and children. (ASQ also offers fun and effective learning activities parents and children can do together between screenings.)
- It’s easy and quick. Screening isn’t a long, time-intensive process. It can be completed in many settings, from homes to a doctor’s waiting room, and parents can fill out most screening questionnaires in under 15 minutes.
